As Sarah's grief and fear intensify, she begins to withdraw from the world around her. She stops going to work and school, and she spends her days locked in her apartment, haunted by the ghosts of her past. Sarah's family and friends become increasingly worried about her, and they try to help her through her grief. But Sarah is unable to move on, and she becomes increasingly isolated and alone.

One day, Sarah meets a mysterious old woman who tells her that she can help her find peace. The old woman tells Sarah that she must confront her own demons in order to move on from her grief. Sarah is initially hesitant, but she eventually agrees to the old woman's help.

Together, Sarah and the old woman embark on a journey into Sarah's past. They visit the places where Sarah's fiancé died, and they talk about the events leading up to his death. Sarah begins to confront her own grief and guilt, and she slowly begins to heal.
